Interview with the designer

toy designer: Jin

We interviewed the toy designer Jin who designed kiko+'s new item 'wakka'.

What is the main design aspect of this item?

- The design is very simple so everyone can concentrate on playing the ring toss game.

Were there any areas you found particularly challenging?

- The difficulty with this project was proving the function. We found our design concept and the factory engineer's were different - he had a totally different opinion. However, in the end, we could work together to explain and prove that design has no issue with the function.

Any final thoughts?

- The ring toss water toy is a well known classic toy usually made out of plastic ... kiko+ wanted to put this game into a natural wooden material so kids can enjoy and experience a simple and fun game without the use of electronic devices. In this way we are also sympathising with parents.

gg* also has just released new item!!

kitchen & cafe

A simple build-your-own modular play kitchen consisting of nine parts

Let's go back to basics with this face-to-face style game. Open play enables more interaction with each other.

Play with a pan on the cooktop, just like they do in the cafes and restaurants or maybe like your family does in the kitchen? It is a simple counter, where play expands depending on the ideas and imagination of children.
